RESEARCH

I employ field and laboratory-based experiments, along with archival data, to answer specific questions relating to the ecology of species and ecological communities to inform conservation, management and policy-related processes. My current work is broadly interdisciplinary, highly collaborative and includes analyses of activity patterns, landscape-scale habitat and distribution modelling, quantification of the impacts of invasive species on islands and an assessment of wildlife management practises.

Research Interests Conservation biology; urban ecology; invasive species; population & community ecology; movement & spatial ecology; rare and endangered species; sustainability; rewilding; citizen science; remote sensing.

SCIENCE COMMUNICATION

I am a strong advocate of science communication and outreach and believe that it is important to encourage an interest in science and the natural world in people of all ages. I am the creator and sole curator of the Twitter-based science communication project, Biotweeps, that hosts a different biologist every week and has a current following of > 16,000. Biotweeps has also hosted two global virtual conferences featuring dozens of scientists from around the world and with audiences numbering in the millions. I have given talks to over 20 school, local interest, community and natural history groups in the UK, USA and Canada, in-person and via video calls.
